Jobless Masses Unite Ranks

An Analysis of the Washington Unemployed in the Soviet Union?-M.C. Convention and the Task Ahead

By MAX SHACHTMAN

A long and decisive step has been taken to put an end to the division of the organized unemployed workers of this country into three separate national organizations and countless local groups. By virtually unanimous vote, the delegates assembled in convention in Washington last week in the auditorium of the Department of Labor brought about the amalgamation into one body of the Workers Alliance of America, the National Unemployed League, the National Unemployment Councils, the American Workers Union (a Missouri organization) and several other local and state-wide organizations of the jobless.

The name of the new organization, as agreed upon by all its constituent bodies, is to remain that of the group which had the largest representation at the Washington convention, namely, the Workers Alliance of America. Similarly, the principal officers of the new Alliance have been drawn from the old one.

There can be no two opinions about the progressive nature of the merger. The separation of the unemployed workers into organizations which were not far removed from enlarged editions of the political organizations mainly responsible for their formation or maintenance, has proved to be a costly division of energy and efforts. If may even be added that, just as on the trade union field, so among the unemployed, workers should be organized not upon the basis of their political beliefs, associations or sympathies, but upon the basis of the simple and adequate fact that they are workers-in the case of the trade unions-or that they are unemployed (or part time, or relief) workers in the case of the organizations of the jobless.

The indispensable corrolary to this principle is that in both cases the field must be left entirely free for any member who may be so inclined to agitate in a loyal and comradely manner for the particular political, economic, philosophical views he may hold. The workers demand of their employer that hiring be not confined to those of one sex, creed, race, color or and up-state, the Militant Social-

"In effect, this book is unjust to Trotsky and makes him seem smaller than life. In effect, it reduces his tragedy to the dimensions of a personal quarrel. This is partly the result of a story that he brings forward to explain his fall from power. It seems that when he was a second-year student in an Odessa high school, the boys 'gave a concert' to an unpopular teacher. A dozen of them were caught and punished, but Trotsky, the bright student, was not suspected. A particularly stupid and disagreeable boy named Danilov was so jealous of his intellectual prestige and so angry at his going scot-free that he accused him of being responsible for the whole affair-and the bright student was expelled. even though several friends came to his defense. 'Such.' Trotsky says, 'was the first political test I underwent.' He believes that the nattern established in Odessa was repeated all through his life. and that Stalin, whom he calls 'the outstanding mediocrity in the Party,' played the same ignoble role as Danilov. Other Bolsheviks helped Stalin because they were pecoming self-satisfied Philistines and were made uncomfortable by Trotsky's revolutionary virtue. . . But most people accept a different explanation of his fall, and one that makes him seem more important. Trotsky originated and refused to abandon the idea of the permanent revolution.... All that I witnessed in the Leningrad prison came as a frightful blow to me. Until then I had the highest regard for the G.P.U. This was another one of the phases which demonstrated to me that the degeneration of the once revolutionary power had gone much fur ther than I had presumed. I immediately protested to the prosecutor against these horrors, tortures, false accusations, and "confessions.'

Upon the conclusion of the investigation of my case, I sent a letter to the collegium of the G.P.U. and the C.E.C. of the U.S.S.R., demanding that I be permitted to depart abroad. My communication was left unanswered. There was no need to treat us with ceremony, for we were only representatives of a small Balkan people. Two large sheets of mimeographed material of a very complicated nature were handed them as they came to the meeting where the vote had to be taken, and this in spite of the fact that the strikers had been told two days before that they would be given several days to study the proposals. One argument that has been presented by defenders of the C.I.O. role is that funds were low, money for feeding strikers was running out and the strikers were afraid to go on under these circumstances. One unwillingly admits the audachere. It is generally agreed that the C.LO. with some of the might-wishes and the lead of the C.I.O. much more might have been won. It taxes our credulity to pretty near the breaking point to believe this. An organization with prestige and money offers a victory and a anion to a group of new and ambitious union leaders on a silver platter, and the latter decline the ing agency which just wanted the gift!

But let us assume there is some strike prolonged so as to make monbasis for the argument, then what follows? That these weak-kneed leaders and their course must be backed up by the kind of red-baiting campaing Germer of the C.I.O. along with Burns of the Rubber Workers launched in the closing hours of the strike? That the "heat" must be turned on as was done, on the week and the "political state"

> force them against their will to accept this situation? Obviously, if then in such a crisis a (supposedly) genuine and competent leadership must find means of rallying the competent leadership. Parties in the Strike

Finally a word about the role of political parties and groups. The local S.P. in Akron is small and attempted no distinctive role. The S.P. leaders in Akron were attached to the C.I.O. and played no independent part.

> This is not only an indication of the road that must still be travelled by the Left wing in the Socialist Party-a road which the presence at the convention of splendid rank and file workers gives high promise that they will take. But it is also a matter which justifies apprehensions about the course which the Stalinists will take in the immediate period to follow during which arrangements are to be completed for the holding of various unification conventions on state-wide scales.
