Sales of Turn to Industry' book boosts fall campaign

BY BRIAN WILLIAMS

The Socialist Workers Party drive to get 1,100 Militant subscriptions and 1,250 books by revolutionary leaders into the hands of working people got a boost with the publication of The Turn to Industry: Forging a Proletarian Party by SWP National Secretary Jack Barnes. The new title is getting snapped up by workers looking for a road forward out of the crisis of capitalism.

But with just under four weeks left and a number of areas around the country behind schedule on the goals they've adopted, SWP members are reviewing their plans to ensure they can bring home their goals in full and on time.

Driver Jerion Evans picked up a copy of the book from SWP campaigners Samir Hazboun and Maggie Trowe when they knocked on his door in Louisville, Kentucky, Nov. 9.

"I just quit my job because I felt it wasn't safe any more," Evans said. Now he has a new job as a battery delivery driver.

SAHUARITA, Ariz. — Some 1,700 copper workers on strike at Asarco's five complexes in Arizona and Amarillo, Texas, since Oct. 13 are fighting naked union busting by the bosses. They deserve the support and solidarity of workers everywhere.

UN vote: End Washington's economic war against Cuba

BY SETH GALINSKY AND LEA SHERMAN

UNITED NATIONS — For the 28th year in a row, the U.N. General Assembly voted Nov. 7 to demand the U.S. rulers end their economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba. The resolution passed with 187 votes in favor. Only the governments of Brazil and Israel joined Washington to vote against it. Two governments abstained, Colombia and Ukraine.

For several months the U.S. government has escalated its economic aggression, Cuban Foreign Minister Bruno Rodríguez told the assembly, "increasing the suffering, shortages and damage done to our people."

The U.S. capitalist rulers have never forgiven the Cuban people — led by Fidel Castro and the July 26 Movement — for overthrowing the Fulgencio Batista dictatorship in 1959 ending the imperialist domination of their country. And for carrying out a socialist revolution showing the capacities of workers and farmers to build a society based on human solidarity, not dog-eat-dog capitalist greed.

Stop the execution of Rodney Reed! Family insists: 'Do the right thing'

Nov. 9 protest in Austin, Texas, against execution of Rodney Reed, on death row over 20 years.

BY ALYSON KENNEDY

DALLAS — "Free Rodney Reed!" chanted hundreds of people at the Texas Capitol in Austin Nov. 9, protesting his scheduled execution. The rally followed an hourslong demonstration outside the Texas governor's mansion. Reed, who has been on death row for more than 20 years, is set to be killed by lethal injection Nov. 20.

"The amount of people who have come out is beyond our wildest dreams," said Reed's brother, Rodrick, at the rally, asking for Gov. Greg Abbott to intervene. "It is a cruel and inhumane punishment to make our family to wait until the last day. We aren't asking you to do nothing special. No favors. Just do the right thing."

Canadian election reflects crisis of capitalist rulers

BY JOE YOUNG

MONTREAL — "The outcome of the Oct. 21 Canadian federal elections further deepened the crisis of Canada's capitalist rulers," explained Steve Penner at the Nov. 2 Militant Labor Forum here. "It puts them into an even weaker position to implement policies that address their deep-rooted problems."

Penner was one of the two Communist League candidates in the Montreal area. He ran in the Papineau riding and Pierre-Luc Filion in Longueuil-St. Hubert.

The Liberal Party of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau remains in government, but lost its majority in parliament. It got fewer votes than any governing party in Canadian history and fewer votes than the opposition Conservative Party, but more seats. The Liberals cannot pass legislation without getting votes from at least one of the other parties, the Conservatives, the Bloc Quebecois or the New Democratic Party.

The capitalist crisis is rooted in the downward curve of world capitalism that began in the mid-1970s as a result of the falling profit rate of capitalist corporations, Penner said. It has led to sharpening rivalry among the world's capitalist powers as they attempt to strengthen their own position against each other.

"Canada's ruling families are far too weak compared to the world's biggest capitalist countries," Penner said. "They have no choice but to attach themselves to the U.S. capitalists' coattails and support their imperialist foreign policy from the Middle East to Cuba and Venezuela in the hope that Washington will reward them.

"The fact that Donald Trump unilaterally ripped up the North American Free Trade Agreement with Canada and Mexico and imposed a new trade pact on both countries shows how little success Ottawa is having with that 'strategy" Penner said. The new pact has yet to be approved by either Ottawa or Washington.

"Canada's rulers also need a strong central government to push back working-class resistance, which will inevitably become a threat to their rule as the capitalist crisis deepens," Penner said. "But a strong federal government is exactly what they don't have."

The Liberal and Conservative parties both won votes from across the country in previous elections, but this time the former got support largely from the east and the latter largely from the west. All but one of the 48 seats in Alberta and Saskatchewan went to the Conservatives. The New York Times attributed the decline of Trudeau's support in mineral-rich western Canada to his imposition of taxes on the use of fossil fuels and his "sanctimonious" attempt to "impose public morality."

Aurelie McBrearty asked Penner why access to abortion wasn't addressed during the campaign other than by the Communist League.

Penner explained that parties on the left of capitalist politics made a big issue of Conservative leader Andrew Scheer's personal opposition to abortion. "That was just a cover for the fact that the real issue is the lack of access to abortion for millions of women across Canada, especially in rural areas, the Atlantic provinces and the north." Less than one in five hospitals in Canada provide abortion services.

Penner said women's rights groups "follow a lesser evil policy of trying to elect so-called friends of women's rights, mainly the Liberals and NDP.

"But the right to abortion was won by thousands fighting in the streets to decriminalize abortion, not by voting for bourgeois parties." The unions should fight for a woman's right to choose abortion, he said.

Workers need their own party

"Workers need to break from the lesser evil policies also shared by the union officials, and fight independently of the bosses' parties and build a fighting labor party.

"That's the burning question facing Canadian National Railway workers who voted over 99% to strike," Penner said. They have been without a contract since July. But rail union leaders postponed a strike until after the elections. Instead, they supported the "Anybody but Scheer" campaign of the trade union bureaucracy. Their focus is now on working with the Liberals in its efforts to "make the minority government work."

"But it's a capitalist government," Penner pointed out. "It will only work in the interests of the small handful of wealthy families whose interests it serves, not those of working people."

The same day as the forum, Communist League member Katy LeRougetel spoke in Toronto with a retired mechanic. Rudolph Terrelange, while campaigning. He said he voted for the Liberals, because Trudeau said that "he was protecting workers, making sure they wouldn't be out of a job," when the prime minister intervened to stop the prosecution of bosses at SNC-Lavalin who were accused of offering bribes.

LeRougetel answered, "He was just trying to hoodwink us. Trudeau defends big business, not working people. We need our own party, a labor party that fights to overthrow capitalist rule and establish a government that will act in the interests of working people."

Penner concluded, "The Communist League is building a party that participates in every struggle of the oppressed and exploited to advance a revolutionary strategy, the only course that can win lasting gains." During the campaign CL candidates joined the picket line of striking steelworkers, a rally against Ankara's attack on the Kurds in Syria and an action against Quebec's Law 21, which bans teachers and other public sector workers wearing religious symbols.

He invited forum participants to join the League in its activities and to join the party. "There is nothing more worthwhile you can do with your life."

scribed how bosses at the Walmart store where he works push workers to work unsafely. "What we need to do is fight to wrest control of job conditions away from the bosses and win the right to decide for ourselves what is safe," he said. "After I started wearing my campaign button calling for workers control of job conditions, my co-workers snatched them up and wore them proudly."

Trowe showed Evans pictures from the book of rail workers marching for rail safety in Lac-Mégantic, Quebec, two years after a runaway oil train with a one-person "crew" derailed, killing 47 people there; of miners in Harlan County, Kentucky, blocking rail tracks to prevent bankrupt Blackjewel Coal Co. from hauling coal until bosses paid wages they were owed; of the recent GM workers on strike; and others. "These are the kind of things that are possible when we recognize our worth as human beings," said Trowe, "as Malcolm X encouraged us to do."

Evans agreed, saying, "We all really do need to fight together!"

The introduction to the new title explains that revolutionary leaders like Malcolm, "never tired of reminding working people why discovering our worth is more important than harping on our oppression and exploitation. ... And of showing us in action how we are capable of transforming ourselves — and the foundations of society itself — as we organize together and fight."

Evans also got a Militant subscription and Malcolm X, Black Liberation, and the Road to Workers Power.

David Copeland, a striking shovel and drill mechanic at Asarco's Mission complex in Arizona, picked up a Militant subscription from SWP campaigner Bernie Senter, after Senter visited the picket line to bring a letter of solidarity from 25 of his Walmart co-workers. Copeland texted Senter to say he liked the Militant's coverage of the strike. "I especially like how there wasn't any anti-red or blue stuff," in the paper, he said, referring to the Democratic and Republican parties, "just a mature case for a working-class political party. I liked how the tally numbers for the GM ratification vote was reported," after the strike by United Auto Workers members, he added.

Communist League members and supporters in Canada went door to door in Princeville, Quebec, Nov. 7, where they met Vincent Arseneault, a young mechanical designer in Victoriaville.

Some 400 workers at the Olymel meatpacking company are on strike in Princeville fighting to get their wages up to the same level of workers at other Olymel operations.

"I support the strike," Arseneault told CL member Lynda Little. "The cost of living is always going up and wages are not keeping up. I'm not in a union where I work, but I would like to have one there." He purchased a Militant subscription and the French edition of In Defense of the US Working Class by SWP leader Mary-Alice Waters.

Fund drive needs boost

Alongside the campaign to expand the Militant readership SWP members are also raising $100,000 to finance the party's activities. Through week five the Party-Building Fund remains behind schedule by 11%. The funds are urgently needed to cover the party's political work. Contributions can be expanded by asking those being introduced to the party on their doorsteps to also make a donation to the fund.

To encourage greater understanding of the party's revolutionary program, all Pathfinder books and copies of the Marxist magazine New International are being offered at a 20% discount until Dec. 10 when the drive ends. In addition eight titles are offered at half price when purchased with a Militant subscription.

Malcolm Keenan in London got a copy of Women in Cuba: The Making of a Revolution Within the Revolution and a subscription to the Militant, when Communist League members Andrés Mendoza and Julie Crawford knocked on his door.

"I don't see communism working anywhere," he had told the CL campaigners. Crawford described how the revolutionary government in Cuba relied on the capacities of working people to fight together to change their conditions and in the process change themselves, not the creation of a big welfare state to administer workers and farmers. The book Keenan picked up describes how women were part of the revolution's leadership at every point in the struggle.

"I may have something to vote for," Keenan added as he signed nomination papers to put Jonathan Silberman, the CL's candidate for Tottenham in London, on the ballot for the Dec. 12 parliamentary election.

Explains the working-class program, composition, and course of conduct of the only kind of party worthy of the name 'revolutionary' in the imperialist epoch.

The only kind of party that can recognize the most revolutionary fact of this epoch — the worth of working people, and our power to change society when we organize and act against the capitalist class in all its economic, social, and political forms.

This book is about building such a party in the United States and in other capitalist countries around the world.

Nigeria conference: 'Cuba has always stood by Africa'

BY JAMES HARRIS AND VED DOOKHUN

ABUJA, Nigeria — Some 300 participants attended the 6th African Continental Conference of Solidarity with Cuba Sept. 23-25 at the International Conference Center here in the capital. Twenty-six African nations were represented, along with delegations from Venezuela, Cuba and the U.S.

The gathering was co-sponsored by the Nigeria Movement in Solidarity with Cuba and the Cuban Institute for Friendship with the Peoples (ICAP). Five previous Africa-wide Cuba solidarity conferences have been held between 1995 and 2017, in South Africa, Ghana, Angola, Ethiopia and Namibia.

The Cuban delegation was headed by ICAP President Fernando González, one of five Cuban revolutionaries who served some 15 years in U.S. federal prisons, framed up by Washington for their defense of the revolution. He also fought in Angola from 1987 to 1989, as part of Cuba's internationalist mission to help defeat the invading forces of South Africa's apartheid regime. "Africa is a stronghold of solidarity with Cuba in the world," González told those at the meeting. "Affection and support from the peoples of Africa have always accompanied generations of Cubans, from the early days of the Cuban Revolution."

Conference sponsors included the Nigeria Labour Congress; Trade Union Congress; Nigeria Cuba Friendship and Cultural Association; Amilcar Cabral Ideological School-Movement; National Union of Textile, Garment and Tailoring Workers of Nigeria; National Union of Air Transport Employees; and others.

Cuba's selfless contributions to the people of Africa — from liberation struggles to medical aid and education were discussed, including by former students who had been educated in Cuba. How best to aid Cuba in the struggle against the U.S. government's 60-year economic war and occupation of Guantánamo was also debated.

'In Africa, Cuba is special'

"For the working people of Africa, friendship and solidarity with Cuba is special," said Ayuba Wabba, president of the Nigeria Labour Congress, in his welcome. "Without the intervention of Cuba in the liberation wars on the mother continent, many of us gathered here today would still be in one jungle or another fighting guerrilla battles. But Cuba happened and our chains were broken sooner rather than later."

Wabba also said Africans need to look to Cuba as an example in the struggles they face today. He cited the recent xenophobic attacks being carried out against Nigerian immigrants and Nigerian-owned businesses in South Africa.

"True solidarity with Cuba" means showing "love to other Africans," Wabba said. "The recent xenophobic attacks, or rather 'afrophobic' attacks, would not have happened if we truly take up the Cuban ideals of shared humanity."

In his welcoming remarks Nigerian Minister of Science and Technology Ogbonnaya Onu recalled Cuba's medical aid to the poorest regions of the continent. He expressed his contempt for the U.S. propaganda campaign against Cuban medical workers.

"In the fight against Ebola, Cuba is legendary. Remember the sacrifices that the Cubans made to come here even when others were running away," Onu said to loud cheers and applause.

"Cuba has always stood at the side of Africa and we are here reaffirming that Africa stands by the side of Cuba in these difficult times," Cuban Ambassador to Nigeria Carlos Trejo told the delegates. "The blockade against us is not only a blockade against Cuba. It is a blockade of ideas and of the Cuban example. To fight for Cuba is to fight for yourself. It is a fight for humanity.'

Christine Hoebes, Namibian deputy minister of foreign affairs, spoke about Cuba's role in the Namibian war of independence from apartheid South Africa. "As Namibians we remember the sacrifice of many Cubans and remain forever in their debt," she said.

Sheriff Sholagbunde, from the Amilcar Cabral Ideological School-Movement, called for the meeting to demand African governments promote trade with Cuba despite the U.S. embargo.

"In spite of the many obstacles that the enemies of Cuba presented, Cuba is still here," Abiodun Aremu, interim coordinator of the Nigeria Movement in Solidarity with Cuba and one of the main conference organizers, said in his closing remarks. "We will never abandon Cuba. The future of Africa is inseparable from the future of Cuba."

James Harris, a leader of the D.C. Metro Coalition in Solidarity with the Cuban Revolution and of the Socialist Workers Party in the U.S., also spoke in the closing session. "The U.S. is the chief imperialist power in the world but it is not a monolith. It is class divided," Harris said. "Workers and farmers in the U.S., and youth who are won to their side, are interested in the Cuban example when they learn about it. They can be won to support the revolution."

UN: End Washington's economic war against Cuba

has waged economic war against the Cuban people, their government and their revolution.

Rodríguez listed many of the recent U.S. attacks, including blocking Cuba from importing fuel by sanctioning and threatening maritime shipping and insurance companies; reinstating limits on remittances Cuban Americans send to their families on the island; banning Cuba from leasing airplanes or purchasing just about anything with more than 10% U.S. components; tightening the squeeze on banks that handle Cuban transactions; and ending cruise ship stops as well as direct flights to Cuban airports, except for Havana, measures aimed at sabotaging tourism and the income it brings to those on the island.

US proclaims 'right' to punish Cuba

Before Rodríguez spoke, U.S. Ambassador Kelly Craft denounced the resolution, saying the embargo was just Washington asserting its "sovereign right" to "choose which countries we trade with."

She said nothing about the objection raised by almost every speaker during the two-day debate — that Washington dictates that all other governments and corporations around the world also punish Cuba or face U.S. retribution.

The U.S. ambassador slandered the Cuban government, claiming it "abuses" its own people and violates their human rights. She pushed Washington's lie that Cuban doctors who volunteer for the country's health care missions around the world, are "held in servitude."

And she claimed that Cuba is allowed to purchase $100 million worth of agricultural products and medicines from the U.S. but refuses to do so.

Cuban Foreign Minister Rodríguez answered her, citing examples of medicines and medical devices that Washington refuses to allow Cuba to get.

He explained how Washington imposes restrictions on Cuba that no other nation faces to buy the few products exempted from the embargo. Cuba has to pay cash up front; is not allowed to buy on credit; Cuba is prohibited from using its own ships to transport goods it can purchase; and, he said, "banks that process our transactions are persecuted."

"Who in the world trades under these conditions?" he said.

Pointing to U.S. military interventions around the world, as well as widespread police brutality, the racist application of the death penalty, and abusive treatment of immigrants in the U.S., Rodríguez said, "The U.S. government doesn't have the tiniest bit of moral authority to criticize Cuba or anyone else over human rights." He noted that fully one-quarter of all those incarcerated in the world are in U.S. prisons.

But not every representative who voted for the resolution did so out of solidarity with Cuba. Finnish representative Jukka Salovaara, speaking in the name of the European Union, said EU members were voting for an end to the embargo because "critical engagement" is necessary to undermine Cuba's political and economic system.

The latest moves intensifying the U.S. embargo, he complained, were "very damaging for Cuba's burgeoning private sector" and "EU economic interests."

He called on Cuba "to pursue a comprehensive reform and modernization agenda," code words for bringing back capitalism, and echoed the U.S. slanders that Cuba violates human rights.

Cuba's example of solidarity

Rodríguez didn't need to answer the U.S. slander on Cuba's international solidarity missions, which include thousands of doctors and nurses in dozens of countries. One ambassador after another, regardless of their government's opinions on Cuba's revolution, spoke about their experience with Cuban internationalist volunteers.

"The majority of members of this organization have profited from Cuba's invaluable assistance, solidarity and support," stated Ingha Rhonda King, the representative of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. "In the areas of health care and humanitarian assistance, Cuba's contribution to underserved areas in the world is unparalleled and was typified with its role in the fight against the Ebola epidemic in Africa."

Belize Ambassador Lois Young said the U.S. embargo is meant "to drive a wedge between Cuba and the rest of the world," and this was "unacceptable."

Representatives of several African governments noted the role of Cuba in helping them win independence from colonial rule and in the fight against South African apartheid. In the 1988 battle of Cuito Cuanavale, the combined forces of Cuban internationalists, Namibian freedom fighters and Angolan soldiers defeated an invasion by the white supremacist South African army.

By the early 1990s, Namibia gained its independence from South Africa, Nelson Mandela was freed and the hated apartheid regime crumbled.

Cuba has been "at the forefront of contributing to the freedom and independence of my country," Nelville Gertze, Namibian U.N. ambassador, said.

Despite U.S. hostility and slanders Cuban Ambassador Rodríguez said Cuba does not "renounce our willingness to achieve a civilized relationship" with Washington "based on mutual respect and recognition of our profound differences."

The Cuban Revolution, its 60-year battle resisting the U.S. capitalist rulers' aggression and economic war, and its internationalist solidarity with working people the world over stand as an example for workers and farmers to emulate, including in the U.S.

Striking Minnesota steelworkers rally against 2-tier wages system

BLAINE, Minn. — Chanting "What's disgusting? Union busting," some 200 union members and others joined an expanded picket line for striking members of United Steelworkers Local 63B Nov. 7 outside the Carley Foundry. The 220 workers there have been on strike since Nov. 2. Their contract expired May 31.

"The company makes millions of dollars, and they still want to take from the employees," striker John Abrizenski told this Militant worker-correspondent. The company is demanding a two-tier wage system, paying overtime after 40 hours a week instead of after eight hours a day and other concessions.

"The new contract they want is not fair," said Donteh Smith, who had tried to help organize a union at another foundry before being hired at Carley. "They want to be able to move you from one position to another and give you lower pay."

Among the union members bringing solidarity was a carload of United Auto Workers Local 722 members who had been on strike at the GM parts distribution center in Hudson, Wisconsin. "We're here to support our brothers and sisters," UAW member Dashawn Ramsey said. "They're fighting for the same thing we did—against two-tier wages."

"It's good to see different unions come to show solidarity," said striker Greg McDowell. "It lets the company know we're not going anywhere."

Virginia bus drivers strike contractor for equal pay

LORTON, Va. — Over 50 Metrobus drivers, mechanics and other workers at the Cinder Bed garage and maintenance facility here walked off the job Oct. 24. They are members of Amalgamated Transit Union Local 689, which represents bus, subway and maintenance workers for the Washington, D.C., Metro public transportation system.

After opening the Cinder Bed facility in 2018, Metro contracted out operation of the garage, and all the northern Virginia bus routes that are run from it, to Transdev. Workers there have been without a contract since February.

"Until last year, these were Metro jobs paying the union rate of over $33 an hour," union organizer Brian Wivell told the Militant on the picket line Nov. 3. "Metro brought in Transdev and they're paying workers a little over $20 per hour now, with much worse insurance benefits. They deserve to be paid what all the other bus drivers in the Metro system make."

"The company offered a 20 cents wage increase," said Titus Biney, one of the striking drivers. "That's an insult. Twenty cents doesn't buy a small bottle of water for your baby."

Biney, who is originally from Ghana, had worked as a union bus driver in Chicago. He talked to his co-workers about why they should support the union and the strike. Many are from other countries and were initially hesitant, he said, but now they're walking the picket line.

British Columbia hotel workers gain solidarity in contract fight

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Hotel workers, members of UNITE HERE Local 40, have been picketing the Rosewood Hotel Georgia here since walking out Sept. 22. Management broke off talks Oct. 23.

The workers are fighting for a wage raise, safe working conditions and an end to sexual harassment of women workers. They've stood up to employer attempts to divide and intimidate them.

"CUPE, the painters union, and bus drivers are joining us in our rallies every Thursday," Richard Reddy, a hospitality worker and bargaining committee member, told the Militant on the picket line.

On Oct. 27 some 1,500 other Local 40 members ended a 28-day strike at several other area hotels, winning wage raises of up to 25% over four years. But the Rosewood Hotel bosses insist "they're not going to give us what the other hotels got," Reddy said.

the U.S. A point of interest throughout the conference was a large table featuring books by Thomas Sankara, Nelson Mandela, Fidel Castro, Che Guevara, and SWP leaders Jack Barnes and Mary-Alice Waters. Many participants were surprised to learn that communist literature could be openly sold in the U.S.

"The relations between our countries are part of our history rooted in deep cultural and historical roots," said a declaration adopted by the conference. "Sealed by the blood spilled by the more than 2,000 Cuban fighters who lost their lives in the struggle for the sovereignty of our Nations, men and women who were descendants of the slaves who played a fundamental role in the struggle for the independence of Cuba."

On the last day of the conference participants took to the streets of Abuja to protest the U.S. government's economic war against Cuba and its occupation of Guantánamo. The march had originally been set to finish at the U.S. Embassy, but U.S. government officials complained to the Nigerian government. Conference organizers told delegates they agreed to an alternative route to avoid involving foreign guests in any possible altercation with Nigerian police. Instead, the spirited

2-mile march ended with a rally of 300 in a well-known park in Abuja.

Cuba an example for Africa

Ever present at the conference was the backdrop of the world capitalist economic crisis and imperialism's devastating consequences for the people of Africa. It's clearly the reason why Cuba's socialist revolution is so attractive to those gathered here. Many contrasted conditions in Cuba, a small island country of 11 million with limited natural resources, to the crisis facing working people in Nigeria and the rest of Africa.

In Nigeria, more than half the population of 190 million is estimated to live on less than $2 a day and life expectancy is only 54 years of age. This is despite the fact that imperialist-dominated monopolies have profited greatly off transforming Nigeria into one of the largest oil producers in the world, and the country is rich in other natural resources.

Traveling the 300 miles by road from Abuja to Lagos, as we did after the conference, the social and economic devastation facing Nigerian toilers becomes clear. Once you leave Abuja with its government buildings, paved roads and numerous construction projects underway, conditions change abruptly.

The roads — some paved, others not, or simply flooded out — provide a source of income for many Nigerians who attempt to survive as petty traders on the roadside. Travelers are swamped by women and children, snaking through congested traffic competing to sell every conceivable commodity.

The 15-hour trip is made much longer by checkpoints of armed state police and security forces. Officially supposed to deter the threat posed by Boko Haram, an Islamist terrorist outfit based in the northern part of Nigeria, the roadblocks are seen by many working people as a means of harassment to take bribes.

The trial of Canadian Auto Workers member Roger Warren on nine counts of murder is being exposed as a frame-up, even as the government presses forward with its case. One of the prosecution's main witnesses, Royal Canadian Mounted Police Sgt. Gregg McMartin, admitted in court that he lied several times while interrogating Warren.

Warren is a member of CAW Local 2304. He and his coworkers waged an 18-month strike against Royal Oak Mines in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. The battle ended with a union victory in December 1993. The charges against Warren stem from a mine explosion that killed strikebreakers employed by the company during the strike.

Many miners believe that it was the company's criminal negligence around mine safety that led to the deaths and that the trial of Warren is a continuation of attempts to bust the union.

November 28, 1969

WASHINGTON, D.C. — From every conceivable city, village and town they came to participate in the most massive demonstration in American history. The roughly one million Americans who marched on Washington and San Francisco Nov. 15 were taking part in the largest political confrontation ever between masses of American people and the government that supposedly represents them.

The Nov. 15 march was a powerful refutation of the notion that a march on the nation's capital demanding immediate, unconditional U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam, organized on a nonexclusion basis, was far too radical an action to win the support of the millions of Americans opposed to the war.

When a million citizens of the most powerful imperialist country march through the streets saying stop the war, it is a portent of things to come.

Defiantly answering the Alliedsupported attempt of the counterrevolutionary Pierlot government to disarm the revolutionary fighters of the Resistance Forces in Belgium, 15,000 men and women workers marched through the streets Nov. 19 in a militant and tumultuous demonstration demanding the resignation of Pierlot's government.

The unmistakenly revolutionary mood of the demonstrators was evidenced in their singing of the battle song of Socialism, "The Internationale," by the red flags predominant among their banners, and by the Hammer and Sickle emblem of the Bolshevik Revolution on their armbands.

About half the marchers were women. Also among the demonstrators were a considerable number of men in Belgian army uniform. They paraded and shouted, "Down with Pierlot!"

Back strikers in Asarco fight

Asarco's offices in Tucson on Nov. 18 from noon to 2 p.m. (See ad below.)

"We know the company is highly profitable," said Ryan Connolly, a truck shop mechanic at the Silver Bell mine north of Tucson and member of USW Local 937. "The company is willing to take on significant losses to bust the union in the long run.'

Members of the seven unions at the mine voted 77% to reject the company's "last, final and best" offer that workers call "insulting." That's an understatement.

"With every contract we've signed we've lost something and we're just tired of them taking advantage of us," said Kathy Coleman, a haul truck driver at the Ray mine near Kearny.

"There's been a whole lot of contempt towards the union," said Tim Davies, chief shop steward for the Operating Engineers at the Mission complex.

Asarco's proposal would continue a freeze on wages for nearly two-thirds of the workers, who haven't had a pay increase in 10 years, while slightly increasing the wages of the highest paid — an attempt to divide workers and weaken the unions. It would double or triple health care premiums and deductibles and undermine seniority rights. The bosses' ultimatum also takes away contractual protections for the unions to defend workers on the jobs.

In an Oct. 24 phone conference with its investors, Asarco owner Grupo Mexico — the fourth largest copper conglomerate worldwide — boasted quarterly sales reached $2 billion, an 8.4% increase, despite a drop in copper and zinc prices. The company made it clear it's not interested in negotiating with the unions. Its goal is to get workers to cross the picket lines and add in more scab labor to get the Mission mine production up to 100% by the end of the year.

Many strikers told us how conditions on the job have been steadily deteriorating, increasingly jeopardizing safety. Vehicles and equipment in open pit mines make individual cars and trucks look like toys. The tires alone can be more than 12 feet tall and weigh 10,000 lbs.

Fight for workers control over safety

"The bosses say we don't matter," David Copeland, a shovel and drill mechanic who has worked at the Mission mine for over 20 years, told the Militant. "They tell us they've got people beating down the door to get your job." He described one boss who is fond of getting in the face of new hires to say, "I could fire you right now if I want to.'

"We've done nothing but go backwards and lost ground," he said. "Seniority is not honored for anything. They hire people who are related to the bosses and give them the choice jobs."

In July 2017 Gabriel Benitez was run over by a mine dump truck while sitting in his pickup truck at the Mission mine. "He was a new guy, not adequately trained," Copeland said. "The company found a way to blame the dead guy because he can't defend himself."

Miguel Romero, a welder at the Mission complex for 12 years, said, "They used to have 22 welders. Now they're down to five. Still no raise in 10 years and they want us to do all the work that 22 people used to do."

In addition to Asarco, Grupo Mexico owns mines in Mexico, Peru, Argentina, Chile, Ecuador and Spain. "What they pay those people per day is what we get in an hour," Romero said. "That's

Only a few dozen out of 800 at the Ray mine have crossed the picket line, which is lively and boisterous, especially when trucks enter or exit the mine. "We had no choice but to go on strike," said Fidel Aborca, an operator at the Ray mine. "A neighbor said the other day he got called by Asarco for a job. 'I'm not crossing any picket line,' he told me."

Solidarity makes a difference

Recently a group of airline workers stopped by the picket line to bring support. Food donations are plentiful. One UPS driver dropped off a truckload of firewood to get strikers through the cold weather. "I didn't think solidarity would be this good," said Romero.

On Nov. 11, 30 members of the UNITE HERE union joined United Food and Commercial Workers members who came with lunch for everyone and bolstered the picket line for hours.

After Union Pacific rail workers and their union announced they wouldn't cross the picket line, the rail bosses notified Asarco they would no longer service the mine.

Maria Garcia runs Maria's Cafe in Mammoth and her husband is a striking miner. "If the workers don't have work, we don't have work," she told us. "That's why I'm helping. I take food to them. A union contract isn't just for the workers, it goes to maintain the families."

A solidarity letter signed by some two dozen workers from a Walmart store in Los Angeles where this Militant correspondent works was greatly appreciated by striking workers.

Steelworkers Local 937 President Alex Terrazas said he had been a Walmart worker before he started working at the Mission mine. "This letter means a lot to me because I know how abusive Walmart is," he said.

Miners continue reaching out for support. "Two weeks ago we paired up in groups of two or three to pass out flyers at supermarkets in Sahuarita and Tucson," said striker Bill Foor. "I went to Fry's in Sahuarita and got out 30 to 40 flyers. I was surprised by the good response. Half knew about the strike and half didn't."

Karla Schumann, a strike coordinator for Teamsters Local 104, said, "In the coming weeks, we'll have a much bigger push for community outreach."

Asarco has been trying to keep production going but had to shut down the refinery in Amarillo, Texas, and smelter in Hayden, Arizona. They have hired scabs at the Mission complex to join some miners crossing the picket line.

Unionists support copper miners' picket line at Asarco refinery Nov. 6 in Amarillo, Texas. Workers are in serious fight against bosses' union busting at five facilities in Texas and Arizona.

At the Silver Bell mine, the company's smallest facility, most of the workers crossed the picket line with only 10 staying out on strike.

There is a long history of hard-fought bitter miners' battles in Arizona, including the 1983-86 Phelps Dodge bosses' assault on workers in Morenci that broke the union. So workers know the stakes are high.

Retired miner Bill Becker worked at Silver Bell for 10 years. He has been a regular at the picket line. "This is a long run kind of thing and if you don't stand up you get stepped on," he said.

Workers at the Amarillo refinery held an expanded picket line Nov. 6, joined by members of Local 13-487 from the Valero oil refinery in Dumas, Texas, who cooked a meal for participants.

Send solidarity messages to the strikers via palfchair@gmail.com. Donations to the strike fund and the food pantry can be made via: paypal. me/palfcommunityservice. Everyone is welcome to join the picket lines in Arizona and Amarillo, Texas.

Stakes in Gibsons' fight against Oberlin College smear campaign

BY ROY LANDERSEN

The stakes are growing for the political rights of the working class in the landmark Ohio court battle won June 7 by the Gibsons, the family owners of a local bakery, against a malicious smear campaign by senior Oberlin College officials accusing them of racism and attempting to drive them out of business.

race-baiting slanders — and meritocratic class disdain for working people — by appealing the multimillion dollar award on bogus grounds of "free speech" has been reinforced by a new lawsuit launched against the Gibsons Oct. 31 by some local media bosses.

The institution's course to defend its

The group, which includes some Cleveland news outlets who haven't previously shown much interest in covering the fight, is now backing the college's efforts to smear the Gibsons under the guise of "freedom of the press." Their legal moves now are an exact copy of moves by the college that were rejected by the trial judge. They seek to unseal Facebook records of a Gibson family member who wasn't directly involved in the lawsuit or trial. Oberlin's earlier effort to unseal the Facebook records was rejected because the school never argued they were pertinent to their case at the trial.

The college recently hired an additional phalanx of high-priced lawyers in an effort to overturn the unanimous Oberlin College's campaign against the Gibson family and their court victory took a hit Nov. 3 when the national CBS "Sunday Morning" show ran a 13-minute program on the dispute. The feature allows both college administrators and the Gibsons to explain how they see the case, but it clearly shines a critical light on Oberlin's dishonesty about its slander campaign.

journalist Ted Koppel, college President Carmen Twillie Ambar had to acknowledge the jury's findings, but claimed that one could have different "perceptions" of "disparate treatment with respect to people of color in the store."

But neither Ambar's interview nor any court testimony raised a single objective fact of any actual discrimination by the Gibsons. The college didn't present a single area resident at trial to back up its slanders. In fact, testimony and evidence at trial confirmed the ex-

Carpenter claims the issue is students' free speech, their "right to say what they said during the initial protests and whether the college is on the hook [for that].

The college administration's appeal, filed Oct. 8, makes the same argument, insisting the jury's decision jeopardized First Amendment rights to free speech by students.

But the Gibsons didn't sue any students. They sued the college and some of its officials for their actions to try and smear and crush the family and

The "Sunday Morning" report makes it clear it was only "when the college refused to issue a statement exonerating the family of racism [that] the Gibsons filed a lawsuit.

And, as the CBS clip notes, "Freedom of speech does not grant a license to libel." But it equivocates, saying "there are real concerns that the size of this award — $31.5 million — could undermine genuine freedom of speech on college campuses.'

David Gibson, the store owner, was asked by Koppel, "You had been branded as racists and you felt that was unjust, unfair, untrue?"

"Absolutely," Gibson responds. "What you have in life is your reputation. It had taken generations to build this reputation for us."

The Gibsons family bakery had provisioned the college for over a century. The trial revealed the college had never before made any complaint of racism against the store owners.

Koppel asks Ambar, "You're a very distinguished academic. What is your reputation worth?" to which she replies: "My reputation is important."

He then asks, "If your reputation was destroyed overnight, you could

The slander campaign by Oberlin College, one of the most expensive campuses in the country, began with a shoplifting incident at the Gibson's store in November 2016

An Oberlin student, who is Black failed in an effort to use fake ID to buy wine, then stole two bottles. He and two friends attacked store clerk Allyn Gibson Jr., who had tried to stop him. Nine months later, the three pled guilty to attempted theft, stating no racism was involved in the affair.

An article in the Grape, Oberlin's student life magazine, said students regularly shoplifted from stores in the towns, including Gibson's. They didn't do this because they needed to, the paper's editor wrote, but because they "felt like it."

For the two days after the arrest, the CBS clip shows, college officials helped organize students to protest at the bakery and "put out and distribute a defamatory flyer which described Gibson's Bakery as 'a racist establishment with a long account of racial profiling and discrimination."

College administrators cancelled their contracts with Gibson's bakery. And when some faculty members questioned and objected to these actions, the officials' response was "f--k em."

Lawyers for the Gibsons family have filed a cross-appeal against the college, to restore the original $44 million jury verdict against it. This was reduced by the judge under an Ohio law that limits punitive damage awards. Similar laws challenged in 13 other states in recent years have been declared unconstitutional.

emission reductions that are set by the polluting regimes themselves. Discharges of carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping gases contribute to the gradual rise in the temperature of the earth's atmosphere.

The capitalist rulers have no concern for the social consequences of their rapacious exploitation of labor, nor their depletion of the soil, destruction of the forests, elimination of species from overhunting or fishing, and poisoning of the waters.

None of the rival capitalist governments, nor U.S. politicians of whatever position on the Paris agreement, offer a serious course to halt the rulers' ongoing damage to the earth, seas and sky. Nor to halt their simultaneous attacks on workers' lives and limbs. Democrats and Republicans alike subordinate workers' interests to those of the bosses, for whom they both seek to rule.

Their calls that "we" must all sacrifice to protect the natural environment are actually directed at the working people here and in the semicolonial world. It is only the working class and its allies that have the power to act against the rulers' plunder of the earth's natural resources, as we organize together to fight the impact of their assaults on our living and working conditions.

The bosses' competition for markets exacerbates their unrestrained pollution of the earth's atmosphere, as they seek to cut costs and cut corners.

Coal miners face the biggest rise in black lung disease in decades, as mine bosses push speedup, lengthen the working day and have driven relentlessly to run production without workers having union protection. The debilitating and ultimately fatal disease had declined 90% from the 1970s to the mid-1990s as a result of a massive fight waged by miners and their union that won the right to shut down production in unsafe conditions.

Bosses in all industries operate in the same manner. OFFER GOOD UNTIL NOVEMBER 30 an illusion entertained by many workers and fostered by the bulk of the labor bureaucracy, the Social Democrats, and the Stalinists. The Militant does well to center its fire on this illusion; this is the main point, and should be the burden of our agitation. Big capital rules through the mechanism of the two parties as far as fundamental issues are concerned, but not always directly in response to their unanimous commands.

There are deep conflicts of interest as well as differences of opinion in the ranks of the capitalists. The two parties, which are in reality two big factions of a unique two-party system united on fundamentals, and the numerous factions and cross-currents within them, reflect these conflicts and differences. The big capitalists on the whole are more class conscious than the workers, but they are by no means omniscient in judging their own political interests. They don't always know what is best for them; and as The Militant correctly observes, they are not notably grateful to politicians who have served them best in a given situation.

These Oliver Twists always cry for more with an animal instinct. And they are not a bit squeamist about their methods of getting it. Their ruthless criticism, obstruction and sabotage of the Roosevelt administration — undeterred by the plaintive bleats of the "liberals" and labor fakers that they were hurting the "war effort" — have to be understood as methods of pressure to compel Roosevelt & Co. to do things their way.

It is not an unreasoning "opposition," as the labor fakers represent it. Results have shown that their brutal "opposition," which put Roosevelt in his place as their servant, has been far more effective than the lackey-like support of the labor leaders offered to Roosevelt as the master. Why should he pay for support that he can get for nothing?

The classes are not homogeneous, and neither are the two big class par-

There are differences of origin — this ought to be the starting point in the analysis of every organism differences of tradition, composition, sectional interests, political machines with their own special interests to serve, different techniques and methods of demagogy to hold various strata of the population in line. These are important factors worthy of notice by the political analyst. But one can lose his bearing entirely if he does not recognize their secondary character.

They complicate the political situation in which the big capitalists have to manipulate the masses in order to assure their firm rule. But in the absence of an independent class opposition on the political field they will continue, as in the past, to solve the problem without too much difficulty.

What is their fundamental method? It is the two-party system. Which party do they support? They support both.

And what is even more important, both parties support them in all fundamental questions. It could not be otherwise under the present political scheme.

The petty bourgeoisie (including the farmers) cannot play an independent role in politics; and the workers — under the Murray-Green policy — have renounced it. In this situation the presidential election becomes a diversion and a safety valve, not a class fight. I would like to see this question treated in an FI [Fourth International magazine] article.

POLITICS

All out for Asarco strike rally Nov. 18!

If there's any way you can swing it, the Militant urges readers to join the Asarco copper strikers' rally in Tucson, Arizona, Nov. 18! Their fight in Arizona and Texas deserves support and solidarity from working people everywhere. Speak out about their struggle and build support among your co-workers, your union, your church and in every other way possible. Send a contribution, a letter of support, join their picket lines. You can make a difference.

Like bosses everywhere, Asarco believes they can foster divisions among workers, encouraging each of us to think only of "me, myself and mine." After nearly 10 years without any raises, Asarco proposes in its insulting "last, final and best" offer to give a paltry raise to about a third of the workers, those who are the highest paid. Workers said, "Hell no!" and went on strike.

The bosses want us to see other workers as our problem, not to see ourselves as part of a class, the vast majority, capable of fighting together against them and their rapacious class.

Asarco is hiring so-called replacement workers

— scabs — to cross the picket lines. The employers and their press work hard to deter other workers learning about this fight and identifying with it as their own. Above all they try to prevent the mobilization of the solidarity necessary to sustain the strike

As more workers learn about this labor battle, our solidarity can strengthen the strikers' resolve.

Everything we do to break down the divisions the bosses sow — between employed and unemployed, native-born and immigrant, men and women, Black and Caucasian — strengthens fights today like the copper workers and helps us build the self-confidence and, most importantly, the class consciousness, necessary to fight and win.

We need to take our working-class battles onto the political plane. Not the self-defeating search for a "lesser evil" among the twin bosses' parties, the Democrats and Republicans. We need to build a labor party to represent our class interests and those of all those oppressed and exploited by capitalist rule.

All out to Tucson Nov. 18!

Stop Texas execution of Rodney Reed!

was convicted by an all-white jury in 1998 for the rape and murder two years earlier of 19-yearold Stacey Stites, a cashier in Bastrop. Stites was Caucasian. Reed, now 51, has maintained his innocence since his arrest.

Reed was in a consensual relationship with Stites, but she was living with her fiancé, Jimmy Fennell Jr., a cop in nearby Georgetown who was the initial suspect. Reed was arrested and convicted after his DNA was found in her body. Reed said the two had sex, but there was no physical evidence linking him to the killing. For years, the Reed family has demanded DNA testing on the belt used to strangle Stites, to no avail.

Fennell is in prison for kidnapping and sexually assaulting another woman. After Reed's conviction, witnesses came forth to say Fennell threatened to kill Stites and that he has confessed. Other prisoners say Fennell bragged that he "murdered his wife for sleeping with a Black man." Witnesses who attended Stites' funeral say Fennell told them, "She got what she deserved."

The campaign to stop the execution has growing support. More than 2.7 million people have signed an online petition. Support for Abbott to call off Reed's execution has come from celebrities, including Beyonce, Kim Kardashian West, Meek Mill, Rhianna and Oprah Winfrey. Sen. Ted Cruz, Austin Mayor Steve Adler, and several other elected Texas officials, both Democrats and Republicans, have called for review of the new evidence.

Another rally in support of Reed is being organized for Nov. 14 at the governor's mansion in Austin.

Georgia cop imprisoned for killing Anthony Hill

BY JANICE LYNN

DECATUR, Ga. — Former DeKalb County cop Robert Olsen was sentenced to 12 years in prison, and eight more on probation, Nov. 1 for the March 2015 killing of Anthony Hill. The 26-year-old African American veteran of the Afghanistan War, who suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder, had been wandering naked and unarmed around his apartment complex after going off his medications. He had struggled to get the support he needed from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

A jury had found Olsen guilty of aggravated assault Oct. 14 for firing the two shots that killed Hill, as well as making false statements about the shooting.

Olsen said he acted in self-defense, claiming Hill had attacked him and pounded on his chest. This was proved false by numerous eyewitnesses who testified that Hill never touched Olsen and had

Correction on George Johnson

I am writing to correct errors in the letter I wrote on George Johnson's life that appeared in the Nov. 18 issue of the paper.

George Johnson was 83 years when he passed, not 82. He was a member of the Brooklyn Socialist Workers Party branch, not the Newark branch, in the early 1980s and in 1986 was also a member of the Oakland branch.

His companion, Louise Goodman, remains a loyal party supporter in Oregon. Thanks. Edwin Fruit never posed a threat to the cop.

Carolyn Baylor Giummo, Hill's mother, told the packed courtroom about the family's more than four-year fight to hold Olsen accountable for killing her son. "He has never taken responsibility for taking my son's life. He never just said, 'I'm sorry for killing Tony," she said.

"The fact that this cop will serve jail time for the murder of Anthony Hill is a victory for Hill's family and for other victims of police killings," Socialist Workers Party Atlanta School Board candidate Rachele Fruit told this worker-correspondent. "It is a reflection of the changing attitudes among working people towards police murders and a testament to the fight waged by Hill's family, friends and other opponents of police brutality."

At a press conference following the sentencing, Giummo thanked all those who had rallied over the years in support of the fight for the indictment and conviction of Olsen. She added that even though she wanted a longer sentence, some time is better than no time.

Nearly 4,000 people were killed by on-duty cops from 2015 to 2018, according to Washington Post data. Only 50 cops were charged with a crime. And fewer than half of those cases ended with any conviction.

1,000s protest in Iraq

Are you Iraqi?" chanted demonstrators camped out in Baghdad's Tahrir Square, condemning the intervention of Tehran and Washington in Iraq, and the tyrannical rule of Saddam Hussein's Baathist Party that was based among Iraq's Sunni minority.

After Saddam Hussein was overthrown in Washington's 2003 war and invasion, the U.S. rulers sought to impose a regime loyal to their interests, setting up a sectarian political system that ensured the predominance of capitalist parties based among the Shiite population. It divided government branches and top positions on a sectarian basis, guaranteeing that the most powerful post of prime minister goes to a Shiite.

But this setup has not produced a strong government for the country's ruling capitalists. They depended in part on Tehran-backed militias to defeat the reactionary Islamic State after it seized control of parts of Iraq and to push Kurdish-led forces out of Kirkuk in Iraqi Kurdistan in 2017. Today they rely on the same forces to carry out murderous assaults on anti-government protesters.

Since the protests started in the beginning of October, over 280 people have been killed and more than 12,000 injured by government-backed forces. Police, the military and Tehran-backed paramilitary groups have used live ammunition, rubber bullets and tear gas against demonstrators.

The Iranian rulers organize militias in Iraq alongside the military forces they back in Lebanon, Syria and Yemen, to extend their clout across the region and to threaten Israel.

Protesters across southern Iraq have targeted buildings linked to the Tehran-backed militia groups like the Popular Mobilization Forces. The Iranian Consulate in Karbala has been attacked four times since early October.

Since Oct. 25 protesters have remained camped out in Baghdad's Tahrir Square. Many others have joined them during the day expressing solidarity, bringing home-cooked meals, music and offering free haircuts. But at night assaults have increased against those at the camp by Iraqi-government and Tehran-backed forces.

"I'm doing it ... for dignity," 29-year-old Al Hamsa Hamid told Al Jazeera at the Tahrir Square camp. "I don't want militias in my country," he added. Hamid fought Islamic State serving in the Iraqi Counterterrorism Forces, participating in the recapture of the city of Fallujah from the sect. Now he volunteers as one of the "goalies" at Tahrir Square, that stop and neutralize tear gas canisters fired at protesters by security forces.

Iraqi state television reported that authorities ordered "explosive experts" to detonate a bomb under Sinak bridge Nov. 7 to drive back protesters trying to cross into the Green Zone where government offices are located.

In Basra, masked men attacked anti-government protesters Nov. 6, killing five and wounding about 120 people, according to medical officials. The day before, protesters seized armored vehicles from the 36th armored brigade of the Iraqi army.

In early November the government reimposed an internet blackout that had been in effect for two weeks in October.

In the country's south, sit-ins kept schools and government buildings shut in Nasiriyah, Kut, Hillah, Diwaniyah and Najaf, reported Agence France-Presse.

Authorities have threatened to sack school and college heads in Mosul, the country's second-largest city, located in the predominantly Sunni area in the north of the country if they allow any students to organize protests there, reported Rudaw.

Iraqi Prime Minister Adel Abdul-Mahdi has now pulled back from his earlier announcement that he would resign, after the Iranian government insisted he stay in office. The prime minister now promises to announce new electoral reforms in the "coming few days."

"These are just words," 30-year-old Noor Mohammed told Al Jazeera in Tahrir Square. Mohammed has been unable to get a job and wants to see Mahdi quit. "Is this how we're repaid?" he asked.

"We stood up for our country and fought IS. ... We deserve to be ruled without corruption." Washington has 5,200 troops stationed in Iraq, part of the tens of thousands it deploys throughout the Mideast to defend its interests against rival capitalist powers.
